GENEVA—BECAUSE OF ITS EXPOSURE to natural hazards, the Philippines is one of the unsafest places on earth.

Based on a new Mortality Risk Index (MRI) released by the United Nations' International Strategy for Disaster Reduction (UNISDR) on Monday, the Philippines ranks No. 12 among 200 countries and territories whose populations are most at risk from earthquakes, floods, tropical cyclones and landslides.

The top five unsafe places based on the MRI are Bangladesh, China, Colombia, India, Indonesia.

These countries are most threatened by four "sudden onset hazards" that have increased in frequency and resulted in more deaths in the last 30 years—the period covered by the study.

The results of the study were released during a press conference at the UN office here in Switzerland presided by Margareta Wahlstrom, UN assistant secretary general and special representative for disaster risk reduction, and Sen. Loren Legarda, the UNISDR regional champion for disaster risk reduction and climate

BIGGEST JUMP

54 new confirmed cases in 24 hours

By Dona Pazzibugan, in Manila and Inquirer Visayas

THE SWINE FLU OUTBREAK IN the Philippines made its biggest leap in a 24-hour period yesterday, registering 54 new confirmed cases and striking students at two more schools—one in Quezon City and the other in Eastern Visayas.

As the number of confirmed cases nationwide ballooned to 247, health officials appealed to people who had shown symptoms of the disease—such as fever, colds, coughing and body aches—to stay at home and not insist on going to work to avoid infecting others.

The 54 new cases confirmed by the DOH range in age from 5 to 70. Only two are foreigners.

Health Secretary Francisco Duque III said there were no new confirmed cases in Barangay Hilera in Jaen, Nueva Ecija, where the country's first community outbreak has occurred, affecting about 20 people, mostly school children.

The DOH has said all the cases are mild.

The country's business leaders said they were taking preventive measures and stressed the need for people not to panic.

Court won't allow kids of Ruby Rose at wake

By Nikko Catherine Calleja

THE REGIONAL TRIAL COURT in Las Piñas has denied the motion of the parents of Ruby Rose Barrameda-Jimenez to allow her two children to visit her wake.

Judge Gloria Aglugub of the Las Piñas RTC Branch 254 released a resolution yesterday rejecting the motion, saying that the children were not willing to visit the wake.

Victor Lladoc, Roberto and Asuncion Barrameda's lawyer, said Aglugub had a private talk with the eldest daughter, 9, over the phone before issuing the resolution at 6 p.m., several hours before the scheduled burial of Ruby Rose.

Asuncion, mother of Ruby Rose, said she was angry at and disappointed by the

Challenge premature, SC rules

By the Inquirer Staff

THE SUPREME COURT YESterday ruled that a challenge to a move by the House of Representatives to convene a Senate-less constituent assembly (Con-ass) was premature, prompting lawmakers to buckle down to make the event happen and institute revisions in the Constitution.

"The House has not yet performed a positive act that would warrant an intervention from this Court," the high tribunal said in an eight-page unanimous resolution throwing out petitions by lawyer Oliver Lozano and businessman Louis Biraogo.

The court said the petitioners had no standing to question House Resolution No. 1109 and brushed off their claim that they were taxpayers. The tribunal said that no tax money had yet been spent for the planned exercise.

While saying that it had taken a liberal position in entertaining questions of law from those who claim to suffer personal injury from state acts, it declared that "it is not an open invitation for the ignorant and the ignoble to file

CA grants writ of amparo, DND protection to Navy whistle-blower

By Norman Bordadora

THE COURT OF APPEALS yesterday granted whistle-blower Navy Lt. Nancy Gadian a protection order under the writ of amparo, requiring Defense Secretary Gilberto Teodoro to ensure her safety.

The appellate court also ordered Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Victor Ibrado to provide the material facts of the Navy's inquiry into the threats against Gadian, and to prosecute those responsible.

But it denied for lack of basis the petition that the respondents—Ibrado, now retired Lt. Gen. Eugenio Cedo, Navy chief Adm. Ferdinand Golez, and other military officials—be stopped from "sea-

By Christian V. Esguerra and Leila B. Salaverria

AT LEAST THREE OF PRESIDENT Macapagal-Arroyo's closest allies have discouraged her from a possible congressional run, but it's uncertain whether she will heed them.

Asked if the negative observations of Speaker Prospero Nograles, National Security Adviser Norberto Gonzales and Quezon City Rep. Palace: No shady deal over P15-B Imeldific jewelry

By TJ Burgonio, Norman Bordadora and Philip C. Tubeza

MALACAÑANG IS DOUSING SPECulation that the Arroyo administration has struck a "shady deal" with the heirs of the late strongman Ferdinand Marcos over jewelry collections valued at P15 billion.

The speculation was prompted by then Justice Secretary Raul Gonzalez's June 4 order to the Presidential Commission on Good Government (PCGG) to release the jewelry to the dictator's widow, Imelda Marcos, if it finds no legal impediment.

Cabinet Secretary Silvestre Bello III said the fact that Gonzalez's communication was formal and that his position had been "negated" by acting Justice Secretary Agnes Devanadera should douse speculation.

"I don't see any logic connecting Malacañang with that order because Secretary Agnes Devanadera came out with a clear position that it can't be released to the Marcoses because of a le-

New charge filed vs Legacy owner

By Michelle V. Remo

THE BANGKO Sentral ng Pilipinas has brought new charges against Celso de los Angeles Jr., owner of the dissolved Legacy Group, this time for large-scale estafa for allegedly stealing P262.2 million worth of bank deposits in cahoots with some officers of a Cebu-based rural bank.

The BSP said it filed the case last week against De los Angeles, and [illegible] and [illegible], former president and board member of the Cebu-based Filipino Rural Bank, a member of the Legacy group.

According to the complaint, P262.2 million worth of deposits in the rural bank were diverted to the current account of De los Angeles with the help of the two bank officers from September 2007 to September 2008.

Unsound banking

The Filipino Rural Bank is one of the several Legacy-owned banks closed down by the BSP for allegedly engaging in unsafe and unsound banking practices and for failing to fully service withdrawals by their clients.

At the time of its closure on Dec. 5, 2008, Filipino Rural Bank had accumulated [illegible] billion worth of deposits.

"Bank records and statements of account indicated that with the indispensable cooperation of these two officers, unauthorized diversions of funds were made to the current account maintained by Mr. De los Angeles at Filipino Rural Bank," the BSP said in a statement.

According to the BSP, the business model of the Legacy rural banks was designed to defraud the public and the government. Under the model, the banks would invite depositors by offering above-market interest rates. After accumulating the deposits, the bank would divert these deposits for the personal use of the Legacy officials.

7th case filed

The latest case was the seventh filed by the BSP against Legacy officers and owners.

The BSP has also filed four cases of syndicated estafa and two cases of falsification of public and commercial documents against the same individuals.

The BSP said some Legacy officials falsified documents to make it appear that there were loan applications. The fake loans were approved and proceeds were diverted for personal use of Legacy officers, it said.

Earlier estimates of insured deposits with all of the dissolved Legacy-owned banks were placed at [illegible].

RP needs $2.9B for renewable energy

By Amy R. Remo

TO HELP PROMOTE investors, the US Agency for International Development (USAID) recently showcased the country's clean and renewable energy resources and investment opportunities through the Philippine Clean Energy Investor Forum.

The USAID said the Philippines needs $2.9 billion in investments for renewable energy and another $1 billion for energy efficiency over the next five years to achieve clean energy targets.

In a statement, USAID said the forum, which drew more than 100 industry experts and investors, served as a platform for Philippine energy entrepreneurs to showcase their ideas.

"By bringing together clean energy entrepreneurs and investors, the Philippines Clean Energy Investor Forum is addressing the barriers that clean energy businesses face in seeking financing," said Jim Lindborg, mission director for USAID Philippines.

"These barriers make it difficult for investors to identify and screen viable clean energy projects," Lindborg added.

USAID said that by "identifying and showcasing the best ideas, it can help facilitate financing for the projects."

In particular, the Forum showcased six projects, which emerged as finalists in a competition sponsored by the agency and Private Financing Advisory Network, a multilateral public-private partnership managed by USAID in Asia.

What if it were your daughter in the sex video?

Many 'what ifs' cross a father's mind

By Lito V. Gutierrez
Contributor

YEARS AGO, ON THE occasion of my birthday, I was brought to a strip joint on San Francisco's Broadway St. by a couple of friends who wanted to show me what the City by the Bay was all about. Being, as it were, fresh off the boat then, I felt rather overwhelmed. It was like stepping into an X-rated movie. I had barely sat on a stool when a blonde, perhaps barely out of her teens and, save for high heels and oversized earrings, bare as she was when she came out of her mother's womb, came up to me and started grinding her butt on my groin.

My pals were as boisterous as hyenas circling their prey. "It's ok," one yelled over the din, "We've taken care of that already." The other piped in, "If you don't like her, there's plenty more out here." And he was right. Girls in various stages of nakedness were roaming like free-range chicken.

Saying thanks but no thanks, I gently shoved the girl away. I wanted to look for her father and beat the crap out of him. What self-respecting father would let his daughter go into something like that? I also wanted to bolt and go home and hold my then two young daughters as tightly as I could.

I felt so sad that night.

I relate this passage in the rippling wake of the video sex scandal starring Hayden Kho and an assortment of unsuspecting young women. I was asked to write about it from the perspective of a father—as in, what would I do if one of the girls in the videos were my daughter? My instantaneous reaction was: You know what? My daughters would know better than get involved with a chauvinist like that.

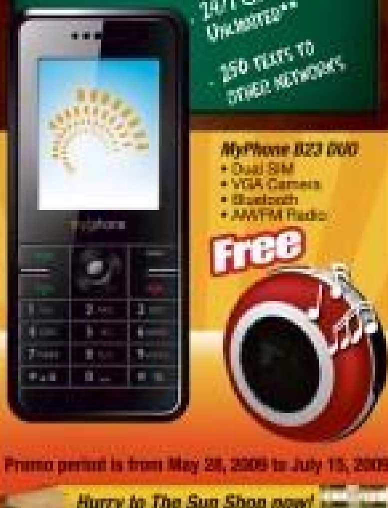

But the question does persist. What if? Well, I'll drop everything and be with her until she gets her head back on her shoulders. I will let her cry as much as she wants and tell her everything is all right because she's in her Daddy's arms and no harm will ever come to her again. I won't even ask her to tell me anything. No explanations, no excuses. If I have to tell her anything at all, it would be to remind her that I'll be there for her and that it's time for her to move on.

But what about the guy? Well, what about him? Wouldn't I want to rip his thing off him? Not really. That, for me, would be descending into the sewer.

Would I be at least angry with him? More sad, actually. Don't get me wrong; what he did, he has

Parenting by example

By Christine F Lirening
Contributor

AFTER MY CHILDREN were featured on "MOMents" (a talk show for mothers on Net 25 hosted by Gladys Reyes), I was flattered when a few parents asked for my advice. Their interest was piqued by the television show's feature on the role of music education and community support in parenting, and they asked me to share my "parenting formula."

Not wanting to disappoint the inquiring parents but also concerned about coming across as a know-it-all parenting expert (which I am most definitely not), I shared with them my belief that there are no one-size-fits-all parenting rules which are, at the most, meant to serve merely as guides. Setting rules for your children without being too rigid is a tough challenge, I explained, so try to be flexible and adapt your parenting style to a particular situation.

What I did share with these well-meaning parents was a set of guidelines I asked my five children to follow—guidelines I also would like to share with readers. To make the guidelines easier to remember, I devised the acronym PEBEFMARCH. It's a bit of a tongue twister but it works for my children.

Guidelines

Prayers in the morning after you wake up.

Eat healthy. Start the day with healthy breakfast. Avoid junk food.

Best self to the world. Be well-groomed and dress appropriately, maintain proper posture, be attentive and always respect your elders, practice punctuality.

Exercise at least 30 minutes a day. Go take up sports and practice for an hour daily.

Fix your things and finish your household chores.

Music. Practice your musical instrument for at least 30 minutes a day. Listen to music CDs.

Affirm and build up yourself and others around you. Never use the word "loser," always use "winner" no matter how simple your and others' successes may be.

Read at least a chapter of a book a day.

Commit to excellence by setting a goal and diligently taking small steps to achieve it.

Healthy and happy living. Pray together before retiring and sleep by 10 p.m.

As parents, we all want the best for our children. We want them to learn and do the right thing. Raising our kids so that they can become the best that they can be requires us to lead by example. I think that is the winning parenting formula.

Christine Lirening is secretary of the Philippine Suzuki Association, a nonprofit organization dedicated to music education of young children. Join the 2009 Summer Suzuki Violin and Cello Camp and Teacher Training on May 24-29 at Greenhills Music Studio (GMS), 205 Connecticut St. cor. Missouri St., Greenhills East, Mandaluyong City.

The culminating concert for all participants will be held May 28, 5:30 p.m., at Shangri-La Plaza Mall. For inquiries, contact GMS at 7240705, 7242443, 0922-8375654.
